Week two at the Capital was very quiet. The Legislature took Monday off in observance of the Martin Luther King holiday. Friday was “pro forma”, which basically means there is no activity. Thursday was very quiet as many legislators went to the funeral service for the wife of Representative Marvin Kleeb. That left only two days of real activity.

There are a sprinkling of new bills, but nothing groundbreaking showed up on the calendar this week. The volume of bill introductions will continue to grow dramatically over the next couple weeks.

The one big piece of news to report is that SB 54, our much discussed update to the Board of Technical Professions statutes, is scheduled to have a hearing in Senate Federal and State Affairs next Wednesday. We have all parties in agreement regarding the language of the bill, and we are optimistic that it will be passed by the committee. As we have reported in the past, the bigger hurdle is expected to come on the floor of the Senate when an amendment (or amendments) is offered that creates an exemption from licensure requirements. We are working hard to ensure that we have enough votes to defeat such an amendment and keep SB 54 moving forward as currently drafted. There aren't enough thanks to go around to all of those who have contacted their Senators over the last several months about the importance of defeating these amendments. You literally changed the course of this legislation with your efforts.

Next week is sure to busier. Stay tuned...
