Following his somewhat surprising graduation from high school, Sean sought stints with a bridge construction company and the U.S. Air Force before ultimately graduating from Kansas State University with a B.S. in Civil Engineering and joining HNTB Corporation in 2000. Then, in an effort to stop making fun of his Jayhawk friends and co-workers, he decided to join them as a University of Kansas grad with a Masters in Civil Engineering in 2005. Overall, Sean has spent 12 years in HNTB's Overland Park office participating in all phases and roles on highway design projects. He currently serves as a Project Manager at HNTB and has spent the last few years in Design and Operations Management roles on very large Design-Build projects in California.

Sean lives with Jill, his awesome wife of 12 years, and is a bit of a restless soul as he thinks he needs to be doing something or going somewhere all the time. Living on, and maintaining a farm about an hour southwest of Overland Park near Greeley, KS and being part owner in a restaurant and bar outside the great metropolis of Scipio, KS helps attenuate this need. However, having no kids and living in the middle of nowhere still forces Sean and his wife to battle their nemeses of sleep and boredom via two things they thoroughly love doing ... 1) traveling extensively and meeting new people; and 2) acting as immature as possible, as often as possible.
