I grew up in a suburb of Wichita Kansas, called Haysville. I was only child of two extremely hard working parents, both of whom have worked for the same company since they were 18. Sports dominated my youth and young adult life. As a teenager, I was given the choice of getting a job or doing well in school and playing sports; I chose the latter. That choice afforded me the opportunity to play Division I baseball at Tennessee Technological University in Cookeville, TN, where I studied engineering and graduated in 2006 with a BS in Civil Engineering.

My professional career started out in structural engineering in Nashville, shifted to residential contracting in Florida, then to civil site design in Cookeville, then to small business owner, then back to engineering at Terracon in Wichita. For the past 8 years I have been in the Geotechnical and Construction Materials Testing side of engineering which has allowed me to combine my passion for construction with my passion for engineering. I spent 5 years with Terracon as a Staff Materials Engineer and Project Manager and then in December of 2014 was given the opportunity to come to work for Professional Engineering Consultants as the manager of the Geotechnical and Materials Testing Division, which has been the best decision I've ever made professionally. I would have to say that my job is pretty easy, in the since that I work with the best people, who have the same drive and passion that I do, which makes those instances when things aren't going smoothly easier to handle.

My wife is a Tennessean hillbilly (her words) and we have been married for 11 years. We have (2) sons: Parker (10) and Hudson (5). My free time is spent coaching both boys in whatever sport they are playing at the time. I still build houses on the side, one about every 2 years and do various other home projects.
