Week 9 was busy at the Capitol as committees hit full stride again after the Turnaround break. There is still no real action on the year's biggest issue, funding of K-12 schools. The legislature has hired a consultant to produce a report advising them on how best to respond to the Supreme Court. That report is due next week, and all real action seems to be on hold until that time.

ACEC Kansas President Kenzil Lynn and Executive Director Scott Heidner met with Larry Campbell this week to discuss ACEC issues. Campbell is the Chief Budget Officer for Governor Jeff Colyer. We had an excellent meeting, reiterating our priorities and needs. This list included desperately needed infrastructure funding of all kinds, continued protection of the state QBS law, and a continued watchful eye on issues such as assignment/limitation of liability, laws impacting contracts, and supporting attempts to outsource work to the private sector.

A new bill was introduced in House Appropriations calling for the creation of a task force to study and make recommendations for the next transportation program. SB 285 (which has already passed the Senate) also creates such a task force, but it would appear this new bill will have different instructions regarding who is to make appointments to the task force and how the task force will be structured. A copy of the bill is not available as of late Thursday night, but should be available sometime Friday or early next week.

One hearing of note next week, HB 2636 (repealing statutory limits on state board of education approval of school district bond issuances) will be heard in K-12 Education Budget Committee Monday afternoon.

There are two additional weeks of committee activity, then each chamber will debate bills on the floor the last week of March. Stay tuned...
